PALERILL

Blue Butterfly

A lighting installation that borrows the language of art and nature. Hundreds of hand-cut crystal butterflies hang on a vertically layered cable structure; each wing carries a rainbow-plated finish that scatters iridescent light across the ceiling and the room. The layout is flexible, so the piece can be composed around an atrium, a ballroom or an art gallery. Modern in line, soft in structure ? romantic, free and unmistakably alive.

A crystal chandelier in which metal curves are drawn like stems, extending the way a vine reaches for light. Multi-coloured crystal opens into a soft rainbow under illumination, shifting with the viewing angle as though stars were moving between branches. Light in weight yet full of tension, the structure is inspired by spring growth, holding the atmosphere somewhere between botany and dream. For double-height villas, large living rooms, art hotel lobbies and private clubs. Not simply a light ? a moving poem of nature.

A sculptural piece that joins natural poetry with high craft. The body takes the form of a branching tree, built as a curved, three-dimensional structure ? a cherry branch flowering in mid-air. Pink-violet crystal blossoms are cut by hand and set along the stems; under light they turn soft and translucent, as if a spring breeze had just passed. Deliberately asymmetric, the silhouette carries both Eastern softness and sculptural intent. Hang several together to form a layered sea of flowers. For wedding venues, art-led retail and high-end residences.

Where fairy-tale aesthetics meet jewel-grade lighting. A ring structure is densely set with multi-faceted, high-refraction crystal and hand-inlaid with emerald and violet crystal flowers ? a magic wreath suspended in air. Light escapes through the joints of the crystal and folds outward in layer after layer, like morning sun through woodland, waking the poetry that was already in the room. Light in presence yet precise in detail, it reads as both floating botanical art and fine jewellery. For master bedrooms, bridal showrooms and art-led dessert spaces; hang several together for a dream-garden effect.

Inspired by the ice patterns and starlight reflections of the world's deepest freshwater lake. A floating oval frame is clad in hand-cut crystal granules threaded with deep amber stones ? drifting ice, or a galaxy come down onto water. A single piece reads as a lake; grouped, the layers recall an archipelago, carving light into relief across the space. The crystal rises and fades, holding the twin registers of water and light, stillness and movement. Lake Baikal is a fixture and a mood at once. For residence atria, art hotels, ballrooms and wedding venues.

A century of craft, worked into light. Baccarat distils French luxury into a permanent classic: flawless high-clarity crystal throughout, diamond-cut to break white light into spectrum. The S-shaped glass arms are drawn by hand at a thousand degrees, their curve elegant and unhurried; eight-point star crystal chains throw prismatic sparks. Suspended red octagonal drops ? Burgundy in glass ? meet the soft glow of the shades in a slow, elegant rhythm. Available from six to forty-eight lights, adaptable to the curve of a vaulted ceiling; the grand narrative of a tall hall, or the quiet starlight of a private bedroom.

Paris, quietly.

An evening breeze along the Champs-Élysées; crystal wind-chimes moving among crystal vines. Each prism-cut drop is a note held still, opening the overture of a Paris romance. Crystal beadwork interlaces with curved arms, reworking Rococo motifs for the present; tiered arms rise in ordered sequence like branches. High-clarity crystal, cut in sixteen facets, releases a fine matrix of starlight through the source ? the moving shimmer of the Seine. What the crystal refracts is the Baroque afterglow of the Sun King; what the chimes answer with is a twenty-first-century variation. Every shift of colour you set in motion is a contemporary reading of the French art of living.

Drawn from eighteenth-century European court aesthetics: symmetry, period carving and the classical line. Candle-style bodies are paired with high-clarity cut crystal, so that light and shadow interlace and descend into real splendour. The body is cast in solid brass with an antique bronze finish that only deepens with time ? dignified, unhurried, permanent. An art object that happens to light a room: for the double-height living room of a villa, a European club lobby, or a private residence that expects presence.

Geometry, drawn in light.
A double-layer structure in which every line holds a rhythm. The outer skin is 2.5 mm 304 stainless steel, electroplated in several passes to a 24K gold effect; folded panels are set in ordered sequence like gilded armour, sharp and dimensional, so that metal catches light and quietly raises the luxury of the room. Inside, diamond-cut K9 crystal bars carry the clarity of pure ice and unfold a wide spectrum of colour ? a galaxy come indoors. Light it, and the atmosphere turns lavish and romantic at once.

Look once and the leaves fall into order ? layered, precisely set, the movement of a feather held still. Gold interlaces with white the way sunlight lies on a white plume: metallic richness without losing purity. Each element is worked individually, its surface carrying a fine hammered texture in metal or a soft matt finish in glass. Under a light hand the material returns a layered play of shadow, speaking of a luxury that prefers not to announce itself.

PALERILL Prism Series

A contemporary chandelier built from the refraction of light, with a line that is firm and clearly ordered. Groups of finely cut crystal columns are arranged vertically on a metal frame, like crystal prisms in nature; lit, they return a spectacle of light and geometry. Inside, gold metal curves interlace and give the body sculptural tension. For double-height halls, luxurious living rooms and private clubs. It adds a cool sense of order ? and, beyond that, an inner rationality and strength. Prism does not only light a space; it is a silent ceremony of light and aesthetics performed in air.

A star-shaped folded line becomes the structure: geometric order married to the art of light and shadow. Every multi-faceted crystal panel reads as a folded ray, set on a gold metal frame ? noble in bearing, never stiff. Light passes through the crystal and returns a clear, many-sided brightness, like stars come indoors. The composition circles and reopens, endlessly repeating, as though fortune kept returning. For villa halls, club ballrooms and fashion-led interiors, Lucky Star builds an art field that is modern and warm at once.

Mystery of the Ocean

Deep-water swells are the starting point:

metal curves become moving waves, and the body drifts like coral and shoals in light.

Water-drop heads are set with bubble-textured crystal, as though sunlight

had broken through the surface and fallen into deep water, refracting a glamour that is impossible to pin down. Tense and released by turns, still and yet in motion, it is mysterious and elegant ? the flow of modern sculpture carrying the spirit of the

Moonlight Jellyfish

The drifting jellyfish of deep water, abstracted into clear and luminous lighting. Layered crystal shades fall in suspension, building the form of trailing tentacles; light filters from inside outward as though moonlight had crossed the surface and cast a moving shadow. Ring metal frames interlace with crystal elements in an ordered lightness ? the ceremony of a classical chandelier, carried by modern line and material. Place it over a dining table for an elegant dinner, or suspend it in a hotel atrium as an installation. Either way the room gains a quiet, romantic, poetic drift.

~~pendant~~

Built on futurism and geometric aesthetics, it forms a sculptural fall of light like a chain. Crystal links lock one into another, opening vertically through the space as though an orbit had been drawn in air. Every piece is cut for precise refraction, so light moves with the structure and shadow steps with the rhythm ? a dynamic order. More than a fixture, it is architecture in the room's language: technology, order and pure modern beauty held between rational geometry and flowing light. The visual lead of a double-height space, and of any interior that believes in the power of design.

Order remade at architectural scale.

Mirror-finished metal rings step downward one from the next, encircled by a dense curtain of cut crystal; the refraction forms a moving, sacred aureole ? a galaxy in descent. The source sits inside the ring, light spreading outward, full yet restrained, soft and thoroughly ordered. Halo calls up the emotion, the rhythm and the ceremony of a room's centre. Born from above and suspended in quiet, it lends a space sanctity, purity and a formal spiritual dimension. The emblem of a double-height house, a hotel atrium or a private club ? a sculpture in light, and a statement of identity.

Sculptural curves trace the passage of time, as though light were running freely through the room, winding and interlacing, dream and illusion together. The body is built from precision-cut crystal bars, combined through continuous bends and layered structure into a form of real movement. Transparent material fuses with the light source; lit, it returns a shining, mobile halo ? a river of time turning in the air. Hung in a double-height hall, an art space or the atrium of a modern villa, Luminous Flow brings futurity, technology and a flowing elegance, becoming both visual focus and emotional source. Stellar Ring

Stellar Ring

Minimal circles, composing the order of light and shadow. Stellar Ring is built from several floating rings, each wrapped in densely cut crystal ? a chain of light set still in air. The crystal surface turns mirror-clear and refracts the source into a fine, exact track of luxury, like drawn lines of light inside the architecture. The line is rational, the mood held in; the result is a measured, quiet, deeply layered room. For double-height living rooms, clubs and art atria, it brings the minimal aesthetics and quiet luxury of modernism. Stellar Ring is not only the composition of light ? it is the boundary of taste.

An Eastern winter camellia, caught in flower: petals fixed inside clear glass, opening layer by layer like an art flower held still. A warm gold frame carries soft white translucent petals; light passes through the core, gentle and mild, building a room that is poetic and romantic. A crystal bead chain hangs below, as alive as morning dew, so the piece stays lavish without losing lightness. Suits French, light-luxury and Chinese interiors ? and especially bedrooms, entrance halls and small living rooms where atmosphere matters most. An ideal maker of everyday ritual.

Glacier

Glacier

Glacier is the starting point: layered cut crystal builds a magnificent structure of crystalline cross-sections, light travelling between them and refracting a cold, brilliant play of ice and snow. The silhouette recalls the high, distant outline of an ancient glacier ? cool and restrained, with real power held inside. Geometric lines are precise and ordered; a metallic-lustre base grounds them, giving the room a nobility in which the modern and the natural coexist. For villa living rooms, dining rooms, art hotels and jewellery clubs.
